

Be my “serval”-entine!

(Love Language Fact: Serval males will give out many Valentines, mating with several females.)

© CRAIG TAYLOR

I “spot” someone cute!

(Love Language Fact: female leopard initiates courtship — growling; parading in front of the male, rubbing her head and fluttering her tail.)

© CHRISTIAN SPERKA

If you seem me on a dating app, “stripe” right!

(Love Language Fact: Female tigers in heat will wander the forest calling continuously until a male responds.)

© KEYUR NANDANIYA

You take my heart to new heights, “fur” real!

(Love Language Fact: Snow leopard mating season overlaps with Valentine’s Day, so they’re committed practitioners of the day of love.)

© SHAN SHUI/PANTHERA/SLT

I won’t “cheetah” on your heart!

(Love Language Fact: Females chirp to attract a male.)

© SEBASTIAN KENNERKNECHT

This mountain lion will climb the highest mountains for you!

(Love Language Fact: Female pumas in heat will cry out to a mate with a rough, screechy repetitive growl called a caterwaul.)

© SEBASTIAN KENNERKNECHT

I want to be your “mane” sweetheart!

(Love Language Fact: Lionesses prefer males with thicker and darker manes, a sign of virility.)

© BRENT STAPELKAMP

Will you accept this rosette?

(Love Language Fact: Jaguar males and females will travel and hunt together during courtship.)

© SEBASTIAN KENNERKNECHT

“Caracal” me, maybe?

(Love Language Fact: Their mating calls sound like a cough.)

© SEBASTIAN KENNERKNECHT

Why so grumpy? It’s Valentine’s Day!

(Love Language Fact: Like snow leopards, Pallas’s cats court each other and fight over mates in the winter.)

© CHRISTIAN SPERKA

It’s Valentine’s Day and love is in the air! Do you need to show that special someone your appreciation as well as your love of wild cats? Share one of our 10 Valentine’s Day #Catgrams.

And who knows? You may learn a little more about wild cat love languages!